asses the SGSY programme implementation and to adopt mid course corrections, if necessary. This concurrent evaluation reported instances of a few ineligible people availing benefits under the scheme. These beneficiaries seem to be mostly of the non-BPL category.

(b) and (c) The programme has been seen to be successful in reaching the targeted groups, though a few instances of ineligible people availing the benefits have been reported in the concurrent evaluation. The evaluation indicates that about 93% of the Swarojgaries belogn to the BPL families and as high as 83.51% of the total individual swarojgaries were of the opinion that SGSY activities have helped them in increasing their incomes. The concurrent evaluation did not point out any specific cases, but the percentage of cush people getting benefits under the Swarnajayati Gram Swarojgar Yojana is assumably very small. These findings have emerged in the Government sponsored study only.

(d) No data relating to the percentage of such ineligible people has been provided in the concurrent evaluation conducted during 2002-03.

Private Participation for Employment Opportunities in rural areas
